by JOHN RHODES

Iowa National Guardsmen Company A, Medium Tank Battalion, quartered at Chariton are disturbed:

(1) There's more than an outside chance that their unit is doomed, as well may be the entire 34th division, in the armed services shake-up coming out of Washington, and

(2) They are certain, or at least have ample reasons to fear that any dismantling of the 34th also will mean moving Company A away from Chariton.

There is some distress in the ranks, too, that this community so far has exhibited only passing interest in their plight and matter which involves a sizeable local payroll and a million dollars worth of combat equipment and facilities.
